

2012 Day 3 Power Rankings

Overall Rank. Team - Record (League Rank) (Previous Rank)

1. Brewers – 7-2 (NL1) (3) – After going 3-1 in Interleague play, the Brewers clinch a playoff berth and seem to be poised to get their captain, Peter Licht his first championship. They play a tough Cardinals club tomorrow as they fight for home field advantage in the first round.
2. Rockies – 7-2 (NL2) (4) – Possibly playing the best wiffleball out of any team right now and the only team to sweep their Interleague games. They have secured a playoff berth and tomorrow's game against the Pirates should be a cake walk to try and wrap up home field advantage throughout the playoffs.
3. Royals – 5-4 (AL1) (1) – Gus has not been the same player he was last season and the team drops 3 to the National league. They all but have a playoff berth locked, but need to hold off a booming Yankees squad by 13 runs to do it.
4. Rays – 5-4 (AL2) (2) – In the playoffs no matter the outcome of their game against the Indians. They had a disappointing Interleague going 1-3 against the NL teams. Can they get out of their losing streak going into the playoffs tomorrow with some momentum?
5. Cardinals – 5-4 (NL3) (5) – After some close losses and unexpected game turnouts, this experienced team now finds themselves out of playoff contention. They have played like a team that could possibly make a run at a title, but are in a tough division. Nick Lape is expected to return to the field of play tomorrow as the Cardinals face the Brewers in their final game.
6. Yankees – 4-5 (AL3) (6) – After going 3-1 in Interleague play, they have a chance for a playoff berth! If they beat their divisional foe, the Royals, tomorrow by 13 runs, they will snag the second spot in the playoffs for the AL.
7. Indians – 3-6 (AL4) (7) – Out of the playoff hunt and are already talking about next year and the future of the franchise. Their game does still matter to their opponents though, so maybe they will come out with a vengeance.
8. Pirates – 0-9 (NL4) (8) – They may become the first team in SWBL history to go 0-10. They play the surging Rockies and have to pitch against a scary Blake Spencer. History, indeed, may be made.
