

2021 Day 2 Power Rankings

Overall Rank. Team, Record, (Division Rank)(Previous Ranking)

1. Twins, 5-0, (Cardinal B&S 1)(1)

Only undefeated game left for Season 19 and Cory McCarthy has won back to back Andy's Frozen Custard Player of the Day awards on his way to being MVP favorite. Chris Meador is second in Home Runs behind Cory and Spencer isn't far behind. Will Rath is also throwing like a man on a mission already at 4-0 this season. Some tough wiffleball still left to play, but this team is living up to their number one preseason ranking.

2. Yankees, 3-1, (Koetting Eye Center 1)(4)

Once again, the Yankees bounce back after a subpar year. Jackson is 3-0 on the mound with ridiculous metrics and Scott is leading the team in offense. They lost to the Twins 13-5 on their last game of the day as they look to not make their losing into a streak with the Athletics and Marlins on deck to start their day on Sunday.

3. Rockies, 4-1, (Glendale CDJR 2)(5)

They are always here. The Rockies just don't go away and look poised to make another run to the playoffs and beyond. Chad Young has been a great addition on the mound and with Grant back in the lineup the old gang is back together. Look for this team to continue their Rockie ways despite a tougher schedule on Sunday.

4. Expos, 3-3 (Glendale CDJR 1)(2)

They started their Saturday with two straight losses, then came back to win 2 of 3 to end the day, defeating the Astros and Royals, two teams they have struggled against in the past. They are feeling good sneaking out a .500 record considering they would easily be 1-5 right now after close games, but their confidence should ride high into Sunday as they don't play until 12:30 PM against the Athletics.

5. Brewers, 2-3, (Koetting Eye Center 2)(6)

Kyle Cornell seems to be done for the year, but Jeremy Worrell has stepped up in a big way, leading the Brewers to a victory against the Royals on both sides of the ball. Peter is hitting well, leading the offense and Curran has been putting good at bats together. The Brewer fire seems a bit lighter after Saturday, but they possibly have the "easiest" schedule on the docket on Sunday and could easily be 6-3 when the day is up.

6. Royals, 2-2, (Cardinal B&S 2)(3)

The Royals are struggling on both sides of the ball and ran into some great pitching from their opponents to keep their offense at bay like we have never seen from this team. They are second to last in runs scored and for the first time in almost a decade, they have a negative run differential. Gus Skibbe leads the league in average and rookie Leon Cherry is starting to feel it on the mound. If Gus and Sam can pitch better and Ty and Auston can find their stroke, then maybe this Royals team can come alive on Sunday.

7. Athletics, 1-4, (Cardinal B&S 3)(7)

The A's ended Sunday with a big win over the Astros behind the bat and hands of Steve Hays on both sides of the ball. Jordan and Josh have been good additions on the mound, eating up innings for this team and giving them a fighting chance, but the big story is having the heart and soul of this franchise in Alex Heck back for the season and the rest of the weekend.

8. Astros, 2-3, (Glendale CDJR 3)(8)

Astros started the season at a franchise best 2-1 clip, with the Expos and Athletics on tap and fell short, losing both games that they considered very winnable to end Saturday with a losing record, when 4-1 was in their grasp. Captain Bryan Benware won his team a game on his own at the plate against the Rockies but hasn't hit since. Keaton Adams and Cole Layton need to find their stroke to compliment John and Cam as they continue towards getting their playoff hopes from getting to far out of reach.

9. Marlins, 0-5, (Koetting Eye Center 3)(9)

Not out of the playoffs yet, but would need a miracle to stay in it. 0-15 since they began in this league, but this year, they are inching their way closer. They got blanked in two games, but only lost by two in the other three. If this offense can gain some traction, they can complement the pitching of Trent Davis on the mound who seems to have found his way with his arm. If Eli and Sam heat up, this team could really get going to finding that elusive first win.
